My worst day on the golf course still beats my best day in the office.
-- John Hallisey

When you think about which skills are needed to succeed in today's competitive corporate climate, things like negotiation and market trends usually come to mind. Yet on a practical level, few skills are more useful than the ability to hit a little ball down a long tree-lined field – in short: GOLF!

Here are just a few of the benefits:

1. Golf is a game of skill, but also leisure. Get to know your partners/rivals better outside the office. Networking is a key strategy in any business and golf gives you instant access to valuable contacts in any city, any field. Need access to a new market? Want to move up the corporate ladder? All these things can happen for you between the fairway and the country club.
2. The time available while playing a round also gives you the opportunity to negotiate informally. Feel out your counterparts' positions and opinions before the big meeting. Many deals are made under the sunny skies of a golf course long before entering the boardroom.
3. Golf is an international game with internationally agreed rules. Whether in Nagoya or New Delhi, you'll be playing with the same tools and from the same rulebook as everyone else. Level playing field.
4. Finally, but not least, golf is fresh air and exercise! Relax in the early morning sunshine surrounded by carefully landscaped gardens or blow off a little stress drilling a bucket of balls down the driving range. You're guaranteed to feel better afterwards!

A wide range of options is open to you: driving ranges, public course, and country clubs. So get out there, hit the links and become successful while having fun. You never know, you may hit a hole-in-one in your next game and your next business deal!
